

Nursing Homes and Long-Term Care

"Long-term care" is defined as helping people of any age with their medical needs or activities of daily living over a long period of time. Long-term care can be provided at home, in various types of facilities or in the community such as assisted living, board and care homes, and continuing care retirement communities.

While most long-term care is provided at home, nursing homes provide the most comprehensive range of services for people who cannot be cared for at home, including skilled nursing care, rehabilitation services, help with activities of daily living, and 24-hour supervision. They provide skilled nursing care, rehabilitation services, meals, and help with activities of daily living. In addition, many nursing homes also offer temporary or respite care.

Administration for Community Living (ACL)

www.acl.gov

Funded by the U.S. Administration for Community Living (<http://www.hhs.gov/acl>) (including AoA (<http://www.aoa.gov/>) as of April 2012), the Community Living Program (CLP), formerly known as Nursing Home Diversion (NHD), assists individuals who are at risk of nursing home placement and at risk of spending down their financial assets to receive home and community-based services that will enable them to continue to live in the community. The program supports the Aging Services Network to transform the funding they receive under the Older Americans Act, or other non-Medicaid sources, into flexible, consumer-directed service dollars to support individuals to live in home and community-based settings. Please note these funds are not given directly to individuals but filtered through state-based agencies.
